Sharon Keathley will have a Life Magazine spread.

Meghan Huff had two first place wins at a conference.

Gary Breezeel had a first, second, and third place win at the conference.

Rick Houston had a piece in the Petit Jean Country Headline paper, and he also did a presentation at the theater on a cattle drive from Arkansas to California.

Those wishing to sponsor a contest for White County Creative Writers need to have their form and payment turned in by November.

Don Money did a talk on the art of flash fiction. Next meeting assignment: write a flash fiction story, 500 words or less, with no more than three characters, two locations, and one central conflict. It needs to be something newly written.

Steve May also challenged everyone to count your lessons for the month about writing and to bring a question about writing to the next meeting.

Deadline for submissions to the next Vault of Terror anthology is Oct. 31, 2026.

Rhonda Roberts' New Release

End Notes by Rhonda L. Roberts is a heartfelt, funny, and deeply moving coming-of-age novel about identity, found family, and friendships that help you rebuild when life knocks you out of tune. Matthew Kellar has a plan for senior year: keep his head down, keep his seat in band, and let his tuba do the talking. Music is where he belongs. It is the one place where he feels steady, sure, and completely himself. Then everything falls apart. A humiliating spiral of bad luck, and one devastating event rips away the future Matthew thought he had earned. With his dreams suddenly out of reach, he is forced to face a terrifying question: if he can't be "the tuba guy," who is he?
